

Veth Propulsion Exsion 11 NAV On Premises

➤ Veth Propulsion is an international manufacturer of innovative (additional) propulsion systems for ships, that derives its name from its founder, Cornelis Veth, who started his welding and fabrication company and engine repair activities in the 50s. Thanks to its innovative way of working, Veth grew steadily, which, 10 years later, resulted in the representation of Scania, a leading Swedish manufacturer of heavy-duty vehicles, buses and industrial and marine engines.

➤ Background:
NAV has a complex data model with numerous tables and relationships, making it difficult for users to identify and extract the specific data they need. Ensuring that data is properly recorded and complete is becomes a challenge because often the users often lack the necessary understanding of the underlying database schema to efficiently query and extract data.

Currently Veth has 100 licenses of Exsion 11 which are used across several departments, such as procurement, financial control, sales, etc.

We spoke with Kees Kornet, Senior Technical Purchaser & Procurement Officer.

Kees: “To Veth automation is essential. We use CAD software to design mechanical installations and electronics, and Microsoft Dynamics NAV (2009R2 Classic) and Exsion Reporting for our administration. NAV is used, among others, for sales and procurement, as well as project, finance and stock management.”

How is Veth using Exsion?

Kees: “Thanks to Exsion, we can closely monitor product flow within Veth and combine the right data, so required components for production can be made available to our staff sooner. This enables us to deliver when needed.”

How do you like working with Exsion?

Kees: “Exsion is very user-friendly and popular among several departments. NAV is less user-friendly, which is why we are looking to renew our business software. A step that makes sense, as efficient automation and fast processing of large amounts of data are vital to Veth’s future.”
